

Mobile firm's coffee break

LEEDS-BASED (aq), one of the UK's fastest growing mobile messaging providers, will soon be adding caffeine to the list of communications services it provides to businesses.

The company has been recently given approval for its plans to open an internet cafe in Chapel Allerton in the autumn.

The Harrogate Road cafe will also serve as a satellite office with an internet telephone link to (aq)'s offices in Park Square.

Managing director, Adam Beaumont, said: "I know that whenever I'm traveling away from the office, I simply can't survive without the combination of my mobile phone, internet access and good coffee. Many business people have the exact same needs and I am delighted that (aq) will soon be able to provide all of these essential business requirements."

(aq) is developing its links within the Yorkshire area and recently became official sponsor of breakfast briefing events held by Leeds Media, the organisation dedicated to promoting the city's growing media sector.
